of an inner sort.

under the long-baking sun of Indian summer,
nature rusts
and in the changeling atmosphere, the

HISTORY: THE DEEPEST REFLECTION

Cornerstone laying in 1898

While Texans were throwing off the yoke of Mexican rule and forced allegiance to the Catholic church, one patriotic Texan appealed to his countrymen in the East to "Remember Texas."

William B. Travis, one of the earliest supporters of Methodism in Texas, wrote a letter on August 17, 1835 which was published in the NEW YORK CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a few months before he was killed in the Battle of the Alamo.

The letter read:

My Dear Sir:

... We are destitute of religious attention in this extensive land ... I regret that the Methodist church, with its fine itinerant system, has so long neglected this interesting country ... About five educated and talented young preachers would find employment in Texas and, no doubt produce much good in this benighted land. Texas is composed of the shrewdest and most intelligent population of any new country on earth; therefore, a preacher, to do good, must be respectable and talented. In sending your heralds into the four corners of the earth, remember Texas.

William B. Travis

Because of this letter and others like it, eastern missionaries came to have a deep interest in this new land. In 1836, when the cause of Texas independence still hung in the balance and when reports from Texas continued to tell of a dire need for religion and education, Martin Ruter, then 52 years old and president of Allegheny College in Meadville, Pennsylvania, asked to be sent to Texas.

His request, and its subsequent approval, produced an unusual scene on a July day in 1837: a large body of students from Allegheny College and citizens from Meadville assembled at the port of Mead to say good-bye to a man who, with his family, was about to start on a dangerous expedition. He was going to Texas.

Martin Ruter traveled by water to Texas. He often remarked: "The way to Heaven is as short from Texas as from any other spot!"

In seven short months that one man laid the foundation for higher education in Texas, for it was through his efforts that Rutersville College, which eventually became Southwestern University, was established. At the end of his first 60 days in Texas, he had traveled 1200 miles by horseback. He made one trip to Bastrop with an armed escort of three men to protect him from bands of marauding Indians.

Martin Ruter gained the support of Governor Mirabeau B. Lamar and General Sam Houston for his plans for a university. On June 25, 1838, only 40 days after the death of Martin Ruter, a group of laymen pledged themselves to establish a university despite the difficulties which loomed ahead.

It was decided that the university should be placed in a town away from the temptations of drinking and gambling; since no Texas town could qualify, however, they decided to form a corporation, purchase a league of land and develop a new town-site. They named the town Rutersville, which was also the name of the college.

Rutersville was granted a charter by the Fourth Congress of the Republic of Texas, Feb. 5, 1840. Granted also were four leagues of land, 17,712 acres, to be used as payment for any expenses incurred in establishing the school. There were some restrictions, however. The charter was limited to 10 years, the endowment was limited to $25,000, and the institution had to be non-sectarian.

The college became a dominant influence in shaping the lives of young men and women throughout Texas. To guarantee the maintenance of moral conduct in this town, Congress granted the school trustees full jurisdiction over all conduct and events within a mile of the school buildings. Fines from $10 to $200 could be assessed by the college officials.

Each term of the school year in 1840 lasted 21 weeks; tuition fees amounted to $20 per term for higher studies, $25 per term for higher studies and languages, and $12.50 per month for room and board in a private home.

The university catalogue of 1845 made this observation about examinations:

The annual examinations of this institution were witnessed by a large assembly of spectators, including several gentlemen of intelligence and distinction.

There was a time when university chapel was held at four o'clock in the morning. Atop a post on the campus hung a large bell that called students to classes, and each morning, in the dead of winter or at other times out came the students, filing into the old chapel. The penalty for missing chapel was missing breakfast, which was served by candlelight immediately after chapel. Chapel came again at 8 o'clock in the morning, and again at sunset.

Approximately 3300 students from Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Indian Territory and Missouri attended the college from 1840 to 1869. The Civil War dealt a harsh blow to the college (as it did to most Southern institutions), for there was a time when the president and all the students went off to war; classes were suspended for the duration.

The period of Reconstruction in the South was also a time of reconstruction for Texas Methodism in the field of education. By action of the five Texas conferences, a central university was planned in Georgetown. This institution was to take the place of the numerous smaller colleges which had all but died away during the preceding decade.

Thus, on October 6, 1873, under the name of Texas University, the present Southwestern University opened its doors for the first time. It encompassed not only the former Rutgersville College, but also Wesleyan College, established at San Augustine in 1844; McKenzie College, established at Clarksville in 1848; and Soule University, established at Chappel Hill in 1856.

The Rev. Francis Asbury Mood, D.D., president of Soule University, was chosen the first president of Southwestern in its new location. He was given the title of Regent.

In 1874, a young minister was appointed by the Bishop to aid Dr. Mood in developing Southwestern University. Dr. James Campbell, later to become a giant in Texas Methodism, came to Georgetown in that year and spent most of the next decade here. In 1906, at a convention of Texas Methodist educators, he gave the following account of his early days at Southwestern:

When the junior preacher arrived at Georgetown in 1874, he found a small village with a moderately respectable courthouse, a few stores and shops and perhaps four or five hundred inhabitants. All the marks of a frontier village had not been entirely effaced, and some of them did not seem to be so very ancient.

It was during the very early days of Southwestern that its true character for at least fifty years was determined. Official publications of the Texas conferences describe the location of the school as 'away from the evils of large cities.' The simple, isolated area of Williamson County was believed highly advantageous for the stated purposes of Christian education and perpetuation of simple provincialism.

Wise and experienced men of Texas Methodism praised the newly-established school with comments such as this "This is the ideal spot for a great institution of learning. The great city may have some advantages ... but it also has its disadvantages." Page after page of the conference reports from this period laud the school and its leaders, not to mention the praise by which the church leaders congratulated themselves for their foresight in founding the institution when and where they did.

From a small beginning of 33 students and four administrator-professors in 1874, the school rapidly expanded. In 1884, at the time of Dr. Mood's death, the enrollment stood near 325, there were fifteen professors and teachers, and the enrollment was continuing to grow. The school had become co-educational about 1878, when a separate building was built for women.

An 1883 graduate of Southwestern, describing the school's rapid ascendancy to prominence, wrote in 1906: "In preparing Texans for the duties which await the men and women of the period I know of no more potential agency than this University ... So I declare ... that the Southwestern University is today the happiest, dearest, and staunchest existing creator and finisher of great Texans."

Despite the desires of early leaders, Southwestern failed to prove as isolated from "evils" as might have been hoped.

SUB in the Forties

Baseball "Nine" about 1898

Legends, many verified by reliable sources, tell of the last public hanging in Williamson County. The spectacle drew several hundred persons from the area around Georgetown, and among those who witnessed the execution, the story goes, were several dozen young ladies from Southwestern, dressed in their party frocks for the festive activities which accompanied such "celebrated" events.

The 1920's were a decade of growth for Southwestern and transportation was no exception. A Megaphone of the era advertises a scheme by some fortunate student with a car: round trips from the Women's Annex to the downtown area for fifty cents per person, with cars leaving every thirty minutes on Saturdays.

The M-K-T railroad came to Georgetown early in this century, and during the Twenties, each day saw six passenger trains northbound and six southbound whistling into the new Katy station on the northwest edge of the campus. An old Megaphone of the period even told students how to "hop a freight" for Temple, where better connections could be made with passenger trains.

Athletics became important at Southwestern, as they did at other Texas schools, just after World War I. During the 1915-1925 period, many special trains carried students, faculty and friends of the University to football and baseball games away from Georgetown.

Many games were played in Temple, and one 1922 trip saw 325 students ride the rails north to Temple where they were met by some 300 students from Howard Payne College at Brownwood; SU won the playoff. The cost of that trip was a total of 2.25, which included train ticket, football ticket, a box lunch and free transportation to and from the football field.

In 1925, the Women's Annex burned on a cold January night. Although no one was killed or injured, the school had suffered a severe financial loss. Not to be overcome by fate, however, the administration quickly took stock of the situation, then moved all men out of Mood Hall and into homes in Georgetown, turning Mood Hall into a women's dorm for a year and a half.

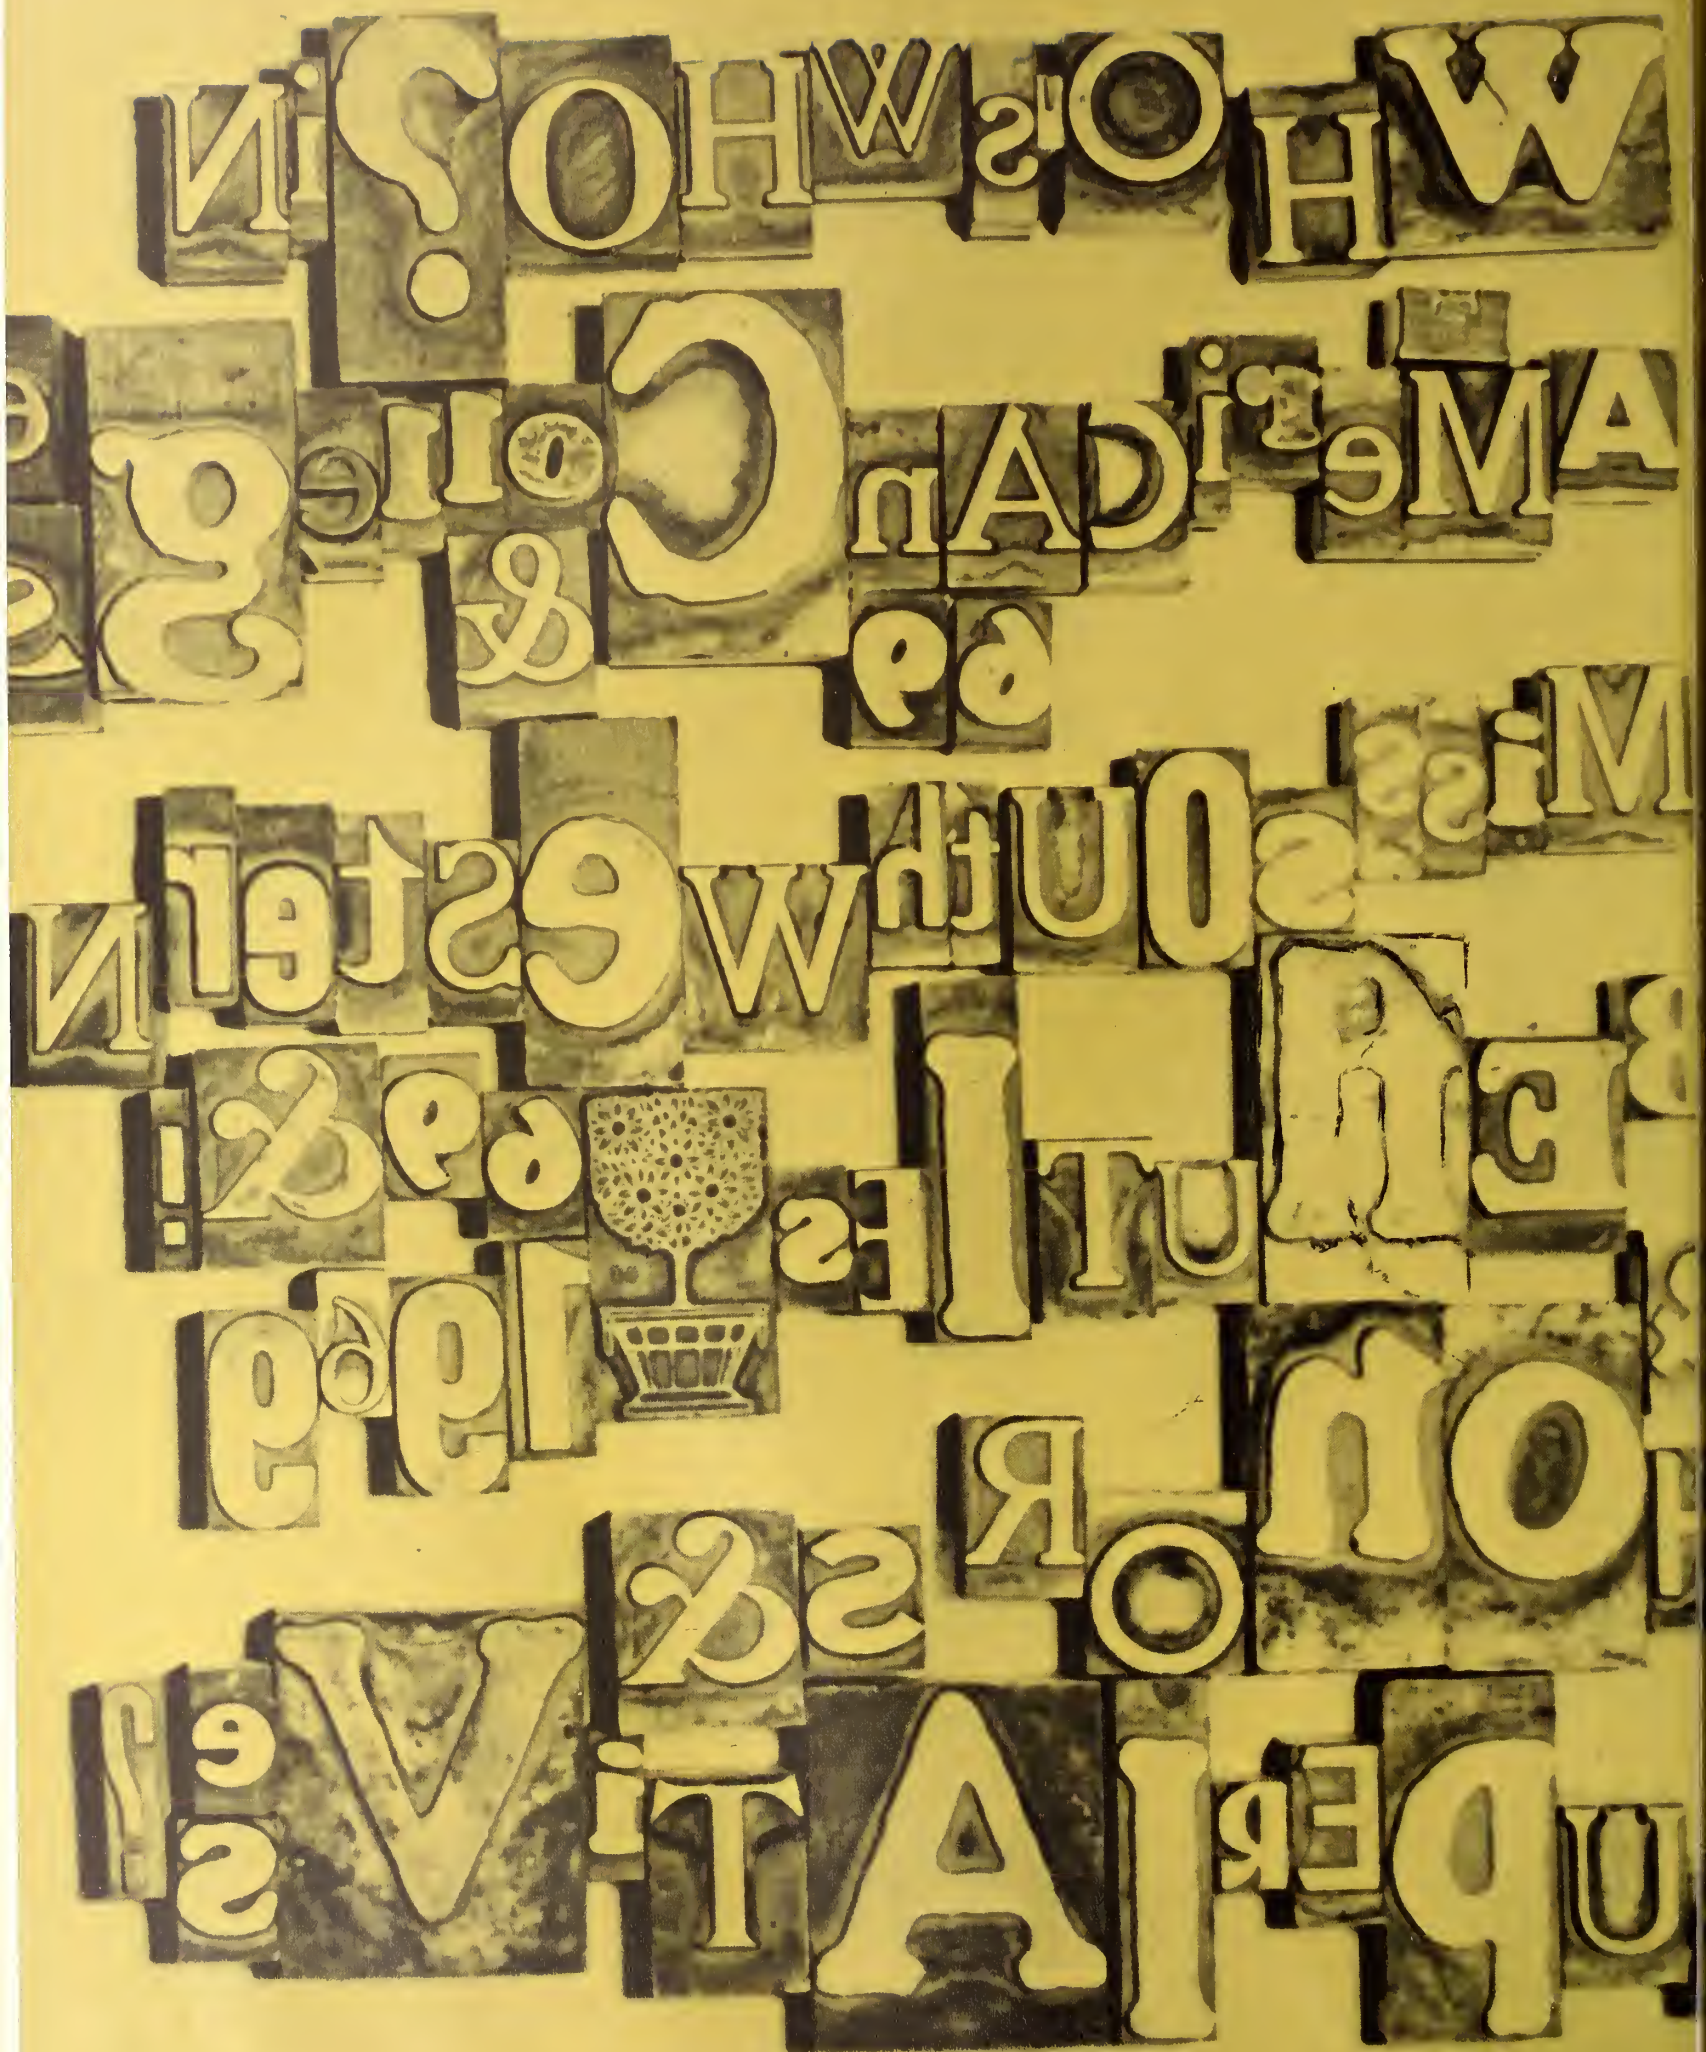

The depression hit Texas a severe blow in the Thirties. Southwestern reeled under extremely large drops in enrollment and limited funds. By the late Thirties, however, the rising prosperity of an economy being geared for possible war had restored some of the old strength to SU.

1940 was the centennial year for Southwestern, and a vast celebration was held. Messages from across the nation poured in to the school from men of high station. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Sen. Tom Connally, Lyndon B. Johnson and many other dignitaries of the state and nation lauded the accomplishments of the one hundred years of higher education claimed by SU.

The war years of the Forties were once again days of glory for SU football. The V-12 units being trained for the War Department at Southwestern provided the school with many top athletes from across the nation at a time when most colleges were barely able to field a team. During this era, Southwestern won the Sun Bowl game at El Paso, and achieved unofficial recognition as the number one team in the nation.

So, from about 50 students and an endowment of $25,000 in 1840, Southwestern University has grown to over 800 students and an endowment of over $7,000,000. The grounds of the university comprise altogether more than 500 acres within and adjoining the corporate limits of Georgetown. Throughout America there are to be found eminent jurists, bishops, ministers, doctors, writers, educators, professional and business men ... all prominent ex-students of Southwestern University, Texas' oldest college.

Man—a social animal,
they say.

Rational and irrational

Rich, poor, normal, and neurotic.

Sees the world as it is,

69 Pirate Basketball

Southwestern's Basketball Pirates finished the season in second place in the Big State Conference with a 6-4 win-loss record and a 14-11 record for the season. The Pirates began the season with a young and inexperienced team with only one returning starter. But they soon proved themselves to be a very fine team.

One of the highlights of the season was the final game in which Southwestern came away with an exciting 78-74 overtime victory over the Conference leading St. Mary's Rattlers. It was an especially pleasing victory for Coach Bill Merritt whose Pirates had not beaten the Rattlers since he came to SU in 1965.

Mike McGee, a junior transfer student, was named to the first team all-conference team and Ken Hoch and Gayle Carpenter were second team and honorable mention respectively. David Deaton, sophomore, and Robbie Matthews, freshman, rounded-out the starting line-up this year. Vernon Cross and Dan Stultz were the other lettermen. Coach Bill Merritt loses only one starter and returns six lettermen and three squadmen for next year.

Top season hitter for the Pirates was shortstop Ken Sadler with a .328 mark for the year.

The Pirates finished the season with a 5-11 worksheet with a freshman and sophomore-dominated squad.

Second high for the year was pitcher Larry Simpson with a .317 mark, while third went to Ken Holley, a pitcher-first baseman, who averaged .314 for the year.

Other top Pirate batsmen included centerfielder Larry Haynes with a .283 mark and outfielder Harry Crenshaw—the only senior on the team—with a .272 average.

Top pitcher for the Bucs was Simpson with a 3-6 won-lost record but a 2.19 earned run average.

Other pitching marks included Holley, a 1-1 record and a 4.33 ERA, and Robbie Matthews, a 1-3 record and a 4.13 ERA.

Top fielder for the Bucs was Simpson with a .962 fielding mark, while Matthews playing a variety of positions in addition to pitching—had a .955 average.

The Pirates had been slated to play a 23 game season, but bad weather reduced the total to the 16 games played.

Head Coach Bill Merritt said that the year was a "building season." "We had a lot of young players, and our youngsters have come along real well," he said.

Epilogue: These Years

There are years
years inbetween yesterday and the nebulous now when life means biting the wind and and spitting out imaginary islands bearing thick evergreeness and sounds rich as harpsicords floating over a still winter bay.
And in these years we speculate sighing war/is/hell and breaking glass for the colors just behind only to find them disappearing vapor.

These years are steel threads
infinite in complexity
                infallible in strength
holding life about our armreach threads that in touching render us intimate threads that cut us
            and while we bleed
                we laugh.

These years begin by declaring us children
babes so newborn
our eyes perceive only distant shapes
some alien, some mother-love.
But in the implosion of an instant
we realize that our skin is not new and wipe cobwebs from around blemished eyes.

And these years ripen us into day by day prisons
some we accept/some we flee
but comes one yellow day
and a lion lunges in our blood and we strain to hear the jungle that is so faraway from the walls we are bound by.

IV

These years have faceless clocks
    silent ticking
        phantom crippling
no burden of the forbidden vision and as they smile covered smiles knowledge slices through that impenetrable impossibility.

V

These years are storms and deep air passion in fingertips
        fires and cities and delusions
and they bring to their mistress the last train to run the obsolete beauty of an era
antique shops of a hundred thousand childhoods
    treading, sweating away fading into darker mornings.

VI

And these years jerk back the curtain on nakedness
leave hunger to the soul
scorch tears away in desert sunsets
and give breath to snowbound tiny flowers.
And these years open back love into many kinds and shapes
    and owners
and we learn to hate
and close our minds
and carry our weapons
and anticipate the bearing of children.

These years become one windowview/past.
We sleep no more because we have tasted a cup
    that allows no complacency
and after, the starving truth
slips quietly in and spawns a horizon of consciousness.

Four years:

One pinpoint piece of time
gives us the salt
the wonder
the granite just beneath a breath

They come, rest a minute and are gone.
